

Autistic people want to be part of the conversation.

Speech-language pathologists can help.

Autistic people may communicate and experience the world differently than non-autistic people.

S-LPs can help break down barriers related to verbal and nonverbal communication challenges.